

A simple guide to the public building process, 40 years in the making

Public building projects are one of the most significant initiatives local governments can take on. Done well, they become landmarks that define civic identity and a place of connection for the community.

But, these projects can last years, even decades, and the process can seem confusing, disjointed, and complicated.

hcma's latest book and online course, Process: How to Create Community Buildings with Impact, guides local governments, city staff, and elected official through the whole thing – from your initial vision, to measuring success when your building is complete.

This bundle teaches you how:

- to get your project off the ground
- to make effective decisions at every stage
- to engage your community
- to define your impact goals
- to manage your budget
- to avoid the most common (and costly) tripping hazards

We're giving BCRPA Symposium delegates 25% off the bundle.
